

A messy order export, tidied every morning

Halvorsen Office Supply, a made up stationery shop, drops its order export into a sheet and a script turns it into a clean table, a summary and a weekly email.

The problem

An order export arrives with five date formats, prices as text, shouted emails, region nicknames, duplicates and totals that do not match quantity times price. Someone fixes it by hand every week.

What I built

- An Apps Script that cleans dates, money, emails, regions, SKUs and status wording
- Duplicates and blanks dropped, totals recalculated against quantity times price
- Rows it cannot repair kept and marked for a person, never deleted
- A summary tab and a weekly report email on a Monday trigger

Measured results

1,056 cells

fixed across 323 exported rows in one run

7 rows

held for a person rather than guessed at 8 tests

covering dates, money, emails, weeks and the full export

The rows it would not guess at Google blocks unverified scripts on the demo account, so the screenshots come from running the same Clean.gs logic locally on the same export.
